For Your Information

What the Public should know about Household Surveys-Statistics Canada's function is to collect and report Canadian statistics. These are used to guide and maintain many government and non-government programs including social programs (pensions, child tax benefits, income supplements) and infrastructure development (schools, hospitals, roads, transit). Is it a Statistics Canada Survey? If in doubt about a survey, a respondent should contact the Regional Office to confirm the survey and the interviewer's authenticity before answering questions. Statistics Canada's phone numbers are published in the federal government section (blue pages) of each local phone book. Personal visit interviews- Households chosen for a survey which is conducted by an initial personal visit normally receive an introductory letter by mail approximately a week before it's visit. This letter provides: the name of the survey, the authority under which the survey is conducted, information on why the survey is conducted, and a contact telephone number at the regional office. During a personal visit the interviewer will show the respondent their ID. This ID can be verified by calling the regional office. A respondent may request to do the survey by telephone. Telephone Interviews: Some surveys, such as the General Social Surveys on Household Safety, are conducted by telephone only in the case the household's telephone number has been selected by random sampling. Statistics Canada does not know the street address and does not send introductory letters. These surveys and interviews can be verified by calling the regional office. All information is protected as CONFIDENTIAL under the authority of the Statistics Act. Telephone All survey respondents (604) 666-1288 or 1-800-663-0172 / General Social Survey (604) 666-6590 / Note Introductory letters for specific surveys may contain other phone numbers that can be confirmed by calling 1-800-663-0172.
