MOBILE OR GELS

What is correct: "mobile" phone or "cell" phone? Same thing. The word cell is short for cellular and has been used since Bell Laboratories set up the first wireless telephony system in 1947. It consisted of a network of low-powered transmitters, each placed to cover a small region or cell. Commercial cell phones were introduced in Chicago in 1978 and in Europe in 1981. If you're surprised to learn that mobile telephony has been around so long, here's another surprise: Bell Laboratories invented the videophone in 1927.

POEM

Angels come to us in different ways,
Some for a moment, some for days,
While we can't always see them around,
Their ever presence is quite profound.

For angels are there looking over our shoulders,
Trying to relieve us of life's little boulders,
That weigh us down, deep in misery,
From being who we really, really want to be.

And now I ask that you let yourself dream,
Let yourself go from that awful scene,
Let your mind find that special little place,
And I'll be that angel waiting with a warm embrace.

For it's really about all of us anyways,
Helping each other through those difficult days,
It's really about truth and love and sharing,
This poem is to let you know, I thank you for sharing.

THE TIN CAN

The tin canister, or can, was invented in 1810 by Londoner Peter Durand. The year before, French confectioner Nicolas Appert had introduced the method of canning food by sealing the food tightly inside a glass jar and then heating it. He could not explain why the food stayed fresh but his bright idea won him the 12,000-franc prize that Napoleon offered in 1795 for preserving food. Durand supplied the Royal Navy with canned heat-preserved food while Appert would help Napoleon's army march on its stomach. Tin canning was not widely adopted until 1846, when a method was invented to increase can production from 6 in an hour to 60. Still, there were no can openers yet and the products labels would read: "cut around on the top near to outer edge with a chisel and hammer." The can opener was invented in 1858 by American Ezra Warner. There also is a claim that Englishman Robert Yeates invented the can opener in 1855. But the can opener did not become popular until ten years later. It was given away for free with canned beef.
