Autism Awareness Month

April is International Autism Awareness Month, and on December 18, 2007, the United Nations General Assembly adopted April 2nd, as World Autism Awareness Day! The aim of autism awareness is to increase dialogue, awareness and understanding of this disorder affecting 1 out of 150 individuals today. How can your help? The first step is to learn about autism and to understand the difficulties a family living with autism faces. Autism spectrum disorder impacts the brain in areas of social development and verbal and non-verbal communication skills. Although autism can be defined by certain behaviours, it is a spectrum disorder, meaning there is a wide variation in how autism affects individuals. Some may display unusual patterns of behavior, repeated body movements such as hand-flapping and rocking, or have unusual responses to people or attachments to objects. Often, sensory integration dysfunction is also evident, causing individuals to experience sensitivities in sight, hearing, touch, smell and taste. Research has yet to determine the exact cause of autism and at this time there is no cure, but there are treatments. Diagnosis involves a number of different measures and screening tools, many based on observation by a team of professionals. Intensive early intervention using a structured educational program has been successful in helping those affected lead productive lives in their communities. In BC, the Ministry of Children and Family Development (MCFD) and Community Living BC (CLBC) anticipate serving more than 4,700 children and youth with ASD through age 18 this year. To learn more about autism spectrum disorder, The Autism Society of BC or how to access a support group in your area, please call Heather at (250)963-0803, or by email to hborland@autismbc.ca Written by Heather Borland, Autism Society of BC, Prince George Office. (250)963-0803.
