David Milne Loved Our Valley

David Milne's talented and generous life came to an end on Sept. 28th, when he succumbed to a rapidly advancing disease. David's many friends and acquaintances were shocked and saddened by his sudden passing.

David was born in England, and dedicated his life to Art. He played a banjo in a skiffle band, and taught art in a university (one of his students was Trevor Jones), before David moved to New York City to further advance his career as an artist. There he found some success, even painting some large pieces for well known buildings, but he quickly tired of New York's "Art Scene." With the advent of computers, David slowly evolved into a business doing desktop publishing.

In 1967, David took a break from his artistic endeavors to travel to the wilds of BC in order to do some climbing on Mt. Robson. Upon his arrival, David was so taken by the pristine beauty of the Robson Valley, that he longed to have a home here, so he bought a small humble farm property on Hinkelman Road, which he purchased for $6,000.

David continued to spend his winters working in New York City, but annually returned to the Robson Valley for his summers to live a rural life on his property. During those summers, he quickly established friends in the Blackwater Coop, a ragtag group of counter-culture "Back-to-the-Landers", who were able to buy food and supplies from a Coop, and share their labor amongst the group, building their houses and developing their homesteads.

During his winters in NYC, he studied architectural magazines, dreaming and planning of the home he hoped to sometimes build on his Robson Valley property.

Twenty-five years ago, David and his wife Lyuba were in the Valley on 9-11 when the terrorist crashed planes into the Trade Center Towers. David and Lyuba extended their stay in the Valley for weeks, to avoid the chaos happening in NYC. When they did return, they found the interior of their Manhattan loft, coated with ash from 9-11.

They also discovered that, as a result of the uncertainty and confusion caused by 9-11, the many jobs their desktop publishing business depended on, dried up. They soon decided that the time had arrived for them to sell their loft, immigrate to Canada, and build David's dream home and studio in the Robson Valley.

David spent his retirement pursuing his intense interests in plants (roses and succulents) with the dedication of a scientist. He designed his dream home, which he had built, and experimented and developed the beautiful chemical glazes for Lyuba's ceramics. All the while, maintaining his lifelong love of the Arts and Music.

Dave's abundant friendliness and generosity spread easily through our small community and his parting leaves a hole in many local lives.

With a huge gratitude and appreciation to the doctors, and the whole medical team for their excellent care, attention, and moral support given to David during his ordeal.

A gathering to remember David's life will be held at 10:30, Saturday, October 10th at McBride's E-Free Church followed by a food and a slide show.
